

Common Behaviors with Dementia

Behavior is a form of communication.

It can be common for people living with dementia to show changes in behavior. Certain behaviors may be an attempt to express discomfort, emotional distress, or pain for one reason or another.

Look for early signs or causes of the behaviors (called triggers). By identifying these triggers, you can better address them before it escalates.

Try not to ignore the problem. Being passive can make things worse.

Common Causes or Triggers

- Physical pain
- Unmet needs – such as hunger or thirst
- Too little rest or sleep
- Constipation or soiled underwear/briefs
- Urinary tract infection
- Sudden changes in routines, care partners, or environments
- Boredom
- Loneliness or depression
- Interaction of medications
- Feelings of loss – the person may miss having the freedom to drive or the company of their deceased partner
- Overstimulating noises
- Unwanted pressure from others – being asked to perform basic tasks like bathing or being repeatedly asked to remember details or memories

Common Behaviors

- Agitation: Fidgeting, pacing the room, yelling
- Aggression: Verbal arguments, threats to physically harm others or oneself
- Hallucination: Seeing, hearing, smelling, tasting, or feeling something that isn't there
- Delusion: Believing something to be true, when it is not
- Paranoia: Believing others are stealing or lying to them, claiming others are “out to get me”
- Rummaging or hiding items: Searching for misplaced items, hoarding objects for “safe keeping,” sorting through items, placing items in other locations
- Sundowning: Late afternoon or early evening restlessness, irritability, or confusion
- Refusal to complete a task: Declining to perform personal hygiene, eat, take medications

Alzheimer's San Diego

Common Behaviors with Dementia

Tips for Responding to Behaviors

- Use the communication strategies to validate the emotions behind what the person is saying, even if it is fantasy
- Use humor when you can to make the activity as pleasant and comfortable as possible
- Allow the person to keep as much control in their life as possible, helping with the task but not doing it for them or to them
- Create a daily routine so the person knows when certain things will happen
- Build quiet times into the day, along with activities
- Keep familiar objects and photographs nearby to help the person feel more secure
- Play soothing music, read a good book, or take a nice stroll
- Reassure the person that they are safe and you are there to help
- Reduce noise, clutter, or the number of people in the same room
- Limit the amount of caffeine, sugar, and “junk food” the person drinks and eats
- Search the residence to learn if there are areas where the person might hide things
- Turn on lights and close any curtains or blinds before dusk to minimize shadows
- Ask your doctor if medication may help reduce or prevent symptoms of agitation or aggression
- Find reasons to compliment the person on who they are, what they contribute, and what skill set they still have

Managing Behaviors

Talk with the person's doctor if you notice sudden changes in behavior. Infections can be common and can cause psychiatric symptoms or aggressive behaviors. A thorough medical examination can identify what else could be causing the unusual symptoms. Medications are available, however, environmental changes should be attempted first before using medications to treat some behavioral symptoms. If the person is aggressive, protect yourself and others. If you have to, stay at a safe distance from the person until the behavior stops or call 9-1-1. Give us a call, our team of Clinical Care Coaches are available to talk through any situation or questions you may have.

Teepa Snow, Challenging Behaviors
Teepa Snow, Managing Challenging Situations
UCLA Alzheimer's & Dementia Care Program
Family Caregiver Alliance

www.teepasnow.com/resources/teepa-tips-videos www.youtube.com/watch?v=Hp8HLExUce8 www.dementia.uclahealth.org www.caregiver.org/fca-videos